The Reynolds Family Association

AFTER two successive reunions in the State of Rhode Island the Association returned to Connecticut in 1908, and held the seventeenth annual meeting in New London on Thursday, August 20. The meeting place was the Mohican Hotel, which has been the scene of previous reunions of the Association. As has come to be the case during the last few years, a large number of those whose ancestors lived in or near New London arrived in this historic town a day or two before the reunion to see the old places and visit those of their relatives and friends who still inhabit them. And others, knowing New London to be one of the most charming summer resorts in all New England, took this occasion to enjoy an outing by the water. Following the custom adopted at Bristol in 1907, a reception was held the evening before the meeting, which was well attended.

The annual business meeting was called to order at eleven o'clock.

Prayer was offered by Chaplain George W. Guard.

Address of Welcome

BY GEORGE W. GUARD

Mr. President and Members of the Reynolds Family Association:—As I look among you and see the different faces—I haven't met you before, many of you, the President and a few others, because it is five years since I had the pleasure of being with you when you met at the Crocker House—it gives me great pleasure to welcome you to the city of New London. There are so many gatherings of this kind, I think as we progress in civilization we ought to know more about our family tree, and I think you will bear me out in saying that as the years go by the associations become more numerous of people who are desirous to know from whence they came and from whom they are sprung, and you see here and there a notice of an association meeting, either one that has just been held or one that is to be held.

It may not be amiss to say a word or two about New London. It is no mean city. It is an ancient town, and from it went men in the old Revolutionary times to gain itself a freedom of which not only we are proud to-day, but the world was proud as well.

New London, from its location, from its grand harbor, from its ease of access, and from its proximity shall I say?—perhaps not its proximity, but because it is so located, so near the ocean and so readily accessible from the railroads from our far western farms and from the wheat fields of our sister country at the north, Canada, which is now developing some wonderful wheat fields, it is not a foolish prediction when I say that within perhaps ten or fifteen or possibly twenty years our docks will groan with the burden of wheat that is to be shipped all over the world.

We have been expecting New London to be a big city, and why it is not a big city I am not here to tell you, because I couldn't if I tried. Possibly one reason that New London is not the sister of New York in point of size is because of our old-time business. Our ancestry were a set of whalers, and when the whaling business, by reason of other oils that were found, became unremunerative, these men who had wrested from the seas a fortune sat down to enjoy the same during the rest of their lives. I never blamed them very much, because you will have noticed that when men put their money into a new business, engage in some new line of business after they have reached 30 or 35 years of age, they usually lose it, and the exceptions to that rule are not many. But New London to-day is doing some business. We make the Babcock printing press, which we send all over the world; and the Whiton Machine Company is a model company in its relations of employer with employee; they make lathe specialties and send them to the far corners of the earth; and if we don't make the purple and fine linen that clothed men and women in ancient times, we make silk here, enough to clothe a nation. From the Brainerd & Armstrong mills go silks everywhere.

As I look out at you this morning I miss faces. You are almost all strangers to me, but I see the same general color of hair, the same strong features, and the same kindly expression of her into whose face I looked when a wee toddler—she who gave me birth—and that kindly expression, that strength and power of expression never left that kind face as long as she was with us, and when, at the age of 98, we laid her away one December day four years ago, under the snow, she was the same lovely, strong, kind mother that she had always been to her family. She was a descendant of Gamaliel Reynolds of Revolutionary fame.

We are all here for a reason to-day. It is not as the boys used to sing in the old days, "We are here, we are here because we are here," but we are here because we are all of one blood, one kin. You have heard the tale of the old savage as he stands out under the sky and bares his arm and the blood is transfused to his tribe from him, making them blood members; but the Almighty mingled our blood years and years ago, so that in all our veins flows the same blood; and if some of our ancestry mingled that blood with the blood of those who lived near the lakes of Killarney it is no shame to them, and some of us are proud of the fact that on one side of the house we are of Irish extraction.

I would not add a word of sadness this morning to this meeting, but I can but refer to the faces that we have seen here and the forms that we have seen here and the forms that were among us, and one in particular as I think of her, she who moved out and in among this company and all the year round was busy gathering data here and there for the closer linking together of those who trace their lineage back to the ancient Reynolds; I refer to Mrs. Fosdick. She not only spent much of her time during the year, as I say, for bringing us closer together, but during the meeting she was here and there, doing this and the other thing to make our gathering a success and a pleasure. But we ought not to be sad when we think of those who were with us, and I predict that it will not be long—I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet—but I predict that it will not be long when instead of the black garb of mourning we will put on white, the emblem of purity and of peace, rather than the dark mourning, because our friends who have left us have gone out into a glorious country. I stood one evening last winter at the beginning of that fathomless country called the Everglades, and looked out over the water at the setting sun, and the pillars of fire and the clouds of glory seemed to me to be almost the gates of heaven, and I said, "It is not far; our friends have not gone far," and it seemed to be just the veil that separated them that we have had with us and loved and lost awhile.

We have come from various places, from Bethel to Babylon, from all over, to do honor to-day to the name. Some of us don't bear the name. You will notice that my name was called last. There always has to be a rear guard, and a rear guard is a good thing to be, you know. If we are in retreat he helps to cover the retreat, but if we are in the advance—and we are in advance, as I see by the increase of names—then he is a good fellow to help keep up the ranks.

It occurs to me that our friend will have to have perhaps later, something like the old class meeting that I attended in Jacksonville some years ago, one class meeting over in this corner, and another over in this corner, and another in that corner, and a fourth over here in a great big room, and when he calls the roll it takes him so long and there are so many that he will have to have an assistant calling the roll over here. But I am glad to see so many increasing, and so many young people, too. I realize that the younger people are going to take the places of some of us if we ever should get old. I don't know as we ever will, but if we ever happen to get old after awhile they will have to take our places.

Not to be further tedious, I want to say to you that we are glad to welcome you to this old city by the sea; and you who have come to-day along a humming iron rail, drawn by the horse who is fed by the fire and smokes out his vengeance upon the air, I don't think it is far-fetched to say that when you shall gather next—perhaps not next, I hope you will gather oftener than that—but some day when you gather in New London I predict that you will step aboard your flying machine and not be confined to the iron rails, but like the birds of the air you will skim away and land in what you will agree with me is a beautiful city. I would not be egotistical, but I must say that New London is a beautiful town. I go away from it sometimes to Syracuse or to Florida or here and there, and when I get back I say something like the man with whom I am acquainted who went to England to receive a fortune—and he did. He came back with two or three hundred thousand dollars, more than the most of us will ever see—but he was asked, "Well, Thomas, what was the best thing you saw while you were away?" "Well," he says, "the best thing I saw was Fire Island light when I was coming back." And so the best thing I see while I am away, I guess, is the old lighthouse when it turns its white light as we come up the harbor. It shows a red light when it is dangerous, but when you get up that far that you can lay your course in it shows a white light to us; and we are trying to show the white light to people to-day to induce them to come and locate in New London. But when I see the harbors of other places—I wouldn't say a word disparaging to, for instance, the city of Bridgeport, because maybe there is somebody here from Bridgeport; I wouldn't say anything against it, but I took some friends of mine out one day—we were out on the Sound, and we went into what was supposed to be a harbor, and I declare to you we got aground drawing two feet and a half of water right in the middle of this thing they call a harbor. And another time when my son and I were starting towards Syracuse—he was going out there to his college and we stopped at New Haven and naturally dropped anchor among the other boats that they called the yacht club, and I tell you in truth there wasn't more than three feet of water. But here the other day we towed a big crib down from above in the river to the place where it is now located, filled with cement and concrete and forming the foundation for a second lighthouse to light the people into this harbor. That crib, drawing 28 feet of water, was able to be towed down, all the way down through to its final location. That is pretty conclusive evidence that we have got a grand, glorious harbor, when you can tow 28 feet all the way through—something you can't do in

New York harbor excepting you go just where it has been dredged and dredged very closely at the expense of a great deal of money.

Now I am glad to see you here this morning. I am sorry that I don't see Judge Reynolds from Bristol and others that I met four years ago at Savin Rock, but I hope in another year that not only we shall meet together, but we shall see those that are not able to be with us to-day. I hope I myself won't have to make an apology for not being with you, as I have to-day; but this thing and the other thing, absence from the city when you have met, has made it impossible for me to be with you; but I am glad to be with you to-day, and now if we are willing to pay the price we will have a good time to-day. I don't mean the price of the banquet; not at all; but the price of having a good time to-day is to get close together, shake the hand of each, one with the other, look into our eyes and bring our hearts closer together by association; may we do that, and may we, in the years to come, be glad that if our name isn't Reynolds we are associated with the Reynoldses, and that the same blood flows in all of our hearts.

I bid you welcome to the City of New London.

Roll Call

Address by the President

Ladies and Gentlemen, and Members and Friends of the Reynolds Family Association:—I wish to remind you that this gathering marks the closing of another year in the history of our Association, and to-day we enter upon the seventeenth year of our existence as an organization, which as originally enunciated by the founder of our Association exists for the betterment of the Reynolds Family and for the embellishing and smoothing of life.

We have returned again from the good State of Rhode Island where our last two reunions were held, to the neighboring State commonly known as the "land of steady habits," the State which achieved such a world-wide reputation for its manufactured products, especially its wooden nutmegs and basswood hams.

It was sixteen years ago that a handful of our members assembled in a family gathering only a few miles from this place, and as their thoughts naturally turned backward to their ancestors, a strong desire was kindled to know more of the history of the old fathers, and while no particular plan was outlined for the work at that time it was, however, decided to meet the next year at the same place; and from the little family gathering on the lawn on a beautiful day in August, 1892, has grown the Reynolds Family Association as it appears to-day, which, let us hope, shall go on increasing until its mission is fulfilled and the original purpose of the publishing of a genealogy of the Reynolds Family shall be fully realized.

The past year has been characterized by a general interest manifested in the work of our Association and a spirit of coöperation and helpfulness exhibited by the members thereof. There has not been, however, the increase in membership that we hoped for, and I again call your attention to the importance of constant growth in order to achieve the largest results and convey to others the benefits that our Association is designed to extend. It is true that our Association is self-sustaining at present, by the exercise of economy, but a substantial increase in membership would permit the undertaking of some of the various projects suggested at previous meetings. I hope the coming year may be one in which we shall realize splendid growth in every department of our Association.

The matter of publishing a history of the Reynolds Family is of interest to every member and friend of our Association, and it is hoped that the committee having that matter in charge will be able to report during this session that substantial progress has been made since our last meeting.

As we meet to-day in mutual fellowship we cannot forget the list of those of our number who have fallen by the way since we last met. The report of our Necrologist, which will soon follow, will indicate the deaths of a number of people, members of the Association, who have met with us in past years and who have always taken an active interest in the welfare of our society. I am sure that our sympathies go out to-day to the bereaved members and friends of our Association.

My friends, I am glad to extend to you a welcome to-day, and I trust you will each endeavor during the coming year to do what you can to make this Association not only the success that we claim for it at present, but that we may add to our number to such an extent that we may be able to do far more than we have done yet.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Report of the Historian

To the Reynolds Family Association, New London, Conn..

DEAR KINSMEN:—Another year has rolled by, and again I find it impossible to attend the meeting of the Association in person, so must content myself with a report in writing.

I have very little to add to what I said in my report last year; have received a number of letters from people asking me to locate their great-grandparents so they might prove their eligibility to membership in our Association; but in nearly all cases they named persons I was unable to find record of in the John of Weymouth branch; though in one or two instances I was able to refer them to the proper historians of the other branches; the others I was obliged to inform that I had no means of tracing their ancestors because they did not know to which clan their ancestor belonged.

During the year I have extended my card index to follow up the families of the "stolen" Reynolds girls down to the 9th and 10th generations, making it easier to trace the collateral branches, but found many cases incomplete, some giving number of children, but no names or dates of birth; others names, but no dates; and others still giving no data of their families; so on the whole it is rather unsatisfactory.

I wrote many letters last year and some in this, to those I could get addresses of, asking for further data, particularly names and dates of births, deaths, etc., but nearly all failed to answer, so I am still "lost in the woods" for want of a compass or chart—but I have the satisfaction (if it is one) of knowing I am not alone in that situation, for all historians have the same experience; but I firmly believe all the lost ones will be heard from very promptly when the book comes out, making strong "kicks" regarding errors and omissions that would not be there if they had furnished the information asked for by my predecessors and myself.

The Association certainly owes a debt of gratitude it can never repay to our lamented founder, Mrs. Fosdick, for the untiring patience and industry she displayed for more than twelve years in collecting such data as we have. She wrote me several times that it was astonishing what apathy the people showed when asked for information; they did not seem to care for any one to know who their ancestors were, or the names of their children.

Last December I received a letter from my cousin, Albert L. Wiard, New Britain, Conn., who has been tracing up the record of the Wiard family (to which my mother belonged), and finds an almost unbroken line back to the twelfth century in Kyre Wyard, England; which set me thinking I might trace our ancestor previous to his coming to America, by the same means, so I wrote to the Postmasters at Broadway (Worcestershire), and Worcester, England, (copy of which I enclose herewith,) asking that it might be referred to the proper persons, etc.; those letters were sent to the Postmaster-General in London, who replied to me that the Post Office could not aid me in the matter; and that prop being so curtly knocked from under me I don't know where to turn next, but have asked my son-in-law, born in England, for some ideas that may enable me to trace them.

Immediately after the 1907 report was issued, Mrs. W. H. Westervelt, of Hackensack, N. J., upon seeing my photograph in it, wrote me, asking whom of my ancestors I most resembled, for she said I resembled her father, Egbert B. Johnson, more than any of his sons, and she could not understand it unless the resemblance came through her grandmother, Mary Reynolds, daughter of Sutton Reynolds, (6) who married James Johnson, March 13, 1820.

I have expended considerable money in procuring the card index and containing case, and, as I am now past my 70th birthday, I would feel amply repaid for my expenditure and labor if the Association will vote me a life membership for the short time yet remaining to me.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

S. WALTER REYNOLDS,
Historian, Reynolds Family Association.

Motion made and carried, that the Historian's report be received and placed on file.

Report of the Nerrologist

BY CELIA MARY REYNOLDS

GEORGE HUNTINGTON REYNOLDS passed away January 3, after a painful illness, at his beautiful home at Mansfield Depot, Conn. Mr. Reynolds was a descendant of James Reynolds of North Kingstown, R.I.

He was born at Mansfield, February 8, 1829. Being one of a family of twelve children he was early thrown upon his own resources. Working on a farm in his boyhood, and later as a spinner in a factory, he employed his spare moments studying and practicing mechanical drawing. As a result he gradually worked his way up to the position of chief draughtsman of the Delamater Iron Works, and, after the civil war, became superintendent of the same. He held the latter position until 1884, when he resigned to take a like position with the Crane Elevator Co., of Chicago. His work in that capacity resulted in great improvement in the passenger elevator service. He was also an inventor and builder of dynamite guns and locomobiles. In 1853 Mr. Reynolds married Abby E. Brown, of Westfield, Vt. Four children were born to them, two of whom are living—George Osmar Reynolds and Irving H. Reynolds.

THE REV. ELMER KENDALL REYNOLDS died January 25 at Farmington, Ill., where he was pastor of the Baptist Church. He was born at Albany, Vt., December 27, 1861, of the line of "John of Wethersfield." After attending schools in Vermont and Massachusetts, and taking an academic course in Wisconsin, he finished his education in Illinois at Morgan Park Theological Seminary, and then labored for fifteen years as a successful and much-loved pastor, serving successfully four different churches. His wife was May Cady, of El Paso, Ill. She and their five children survive him.

MRS. HENRY KIRKE WIGHT passed from this life, at her home at Indian Orchard, Mass., March 8. Jane (Eaton) Wight was born at East Lyme, Conn., being a daughter of Jacob S. and Adeline (Reynolds) Eaton. Her childhood was spent at Ludlow, Mass., where she received her education and afterward engaged in teaching. She is best known for her great love for and devotion to the Evangelical Church, of which she had been a member fifty-seven years. In serving the Church as organist and as teacher of the young men's class in its Sunday School she exerted a wide and lasting influence for good. She was a member of the D. A. R., the Y. W. C. A., and a Children's Aid Association, and was also an enthusiastic student of genealogy. Her marriage to Henry Kirke Wight occurred December 10, 1862. Her husband survives her, also a son, Ralph Waldo Wight, and a grandson, Kirke Stafford Wight.

JOHN DWIGHT REYNOLDS, a former member of this Association, died June 3 at his home at Andover, N. J., in his eighty-first year. His birthplace was Mansfield, Conn., and he was a brother of the late George H. Reynolds of that place, and of Edwin Reynolds of Milwaukee, Wis. Beginning his life-work of teaching, in the autumn of 1849, at Stillwater, he continued that work in the schools of Andover, Dover, Washington, N. J., and several other places. For a time he was town superintendent of schools. His learning was profound and varied, and he is remembered and honored by his scholars, now occupying places of distinction and trust, for the faithfulness and thoroughness of his instruction. Mr. Reynolds was a member of the Andover Presbyterian Church, and the last survivor of the first Board of Ruling Elders, having been a member since 1858. He married Martha Slater, April 6, 1854. A second marriage occurred December 26, 1863, to Mrs. Mary A. (Stackhouse) White. He is survived by a daughter and granddaughter.

THE HON. EDWIN RUTHVEN REYNOLDS, of Albion, N. Y., who was formerly an esteemed member of this Association, passed to his eternal home July 4. He was born at Salem, N. Y., February 16, 1816. His long life was an eminently useful one. He learned the printer's trade in his father's newspaper office at Poultney, Vt., when Horace Greeley was an apprentice there. He graduated from Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y. For six years he was principal of Albion Academy, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. As justice of the peace, as county superintendent of schools, as editor of his county paper, the Orleans American, and as contributor to other local papers, he became prominent in public affairs. Being elected to the Forty-sixth Congress he had the privilege of standing near President Lincoln when he delivered his first inaugural address. Upon returning home he served his county as judge and surrogate four years; then for many years engaged in the practice of law. He was an earnest Christian and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Reynolds married Elizabeth Ann Gale, at Gaines, N. Y., in 1847, who died in 1905. He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Grace Phillips, of Albion, who has resided with him and cared for him since the death of his wife.

ADOLPHUS O. REYNOLDS, of Media, Pa., died August 12, at Colora, Md. A native of Lancaster County, Pa., he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company after attending the West Nottingham Academy, of Cecil County, Md., and held an important position with the company for many years. Mr. Reynolds was a member of the Maryland branch of the family, and after the death of John T. Reynolds was elected to succeed him as a member of the Committee on Family History, representing his branch.

O, when we close the age-dimmed eyes to sleep
 The last sweet slumber of the righteous dead,—
 O, when with aching hearts we softly heap
 The grassy mound above the white-crowned head,
 How glorious is the vision that appears
 Of the blest ending of long, useful years!

Glad angel-welcome at the Heavenly Door,
 Rich benediction of the King Divine,
 Fair mansion-home, peace-lighted evermore,
 The new name, Love's eternal pledge and sign,
 Heart-clasp of living friends long mourned as dead,—
 We see it all, and we are comforted.

The Necrologist's report was accepted and placed on file.

Family History

Owing to the absence of every member of the Committee on Family History no report was offered.

Letters of regret were received from a large number of members who were not able to be present. Among them was a communication from Mr. Charles G. Reynolds, of Chicago, suggesting the desirability of having a suitable motto to accompany the coat-of-arms recently adopted by our Association. The matter was referred to the Committee on Family History.

Postprandial Exercises

MR. HARRY W. REYNOLDS, TOASTMASTER

Mr. President and Members of the Reynolds Family Association:—I had expected until a short time ago that the position of Toastmaster would be taken by Judge John Post Reynolds, but we have been disappointed in his not coming and I shall have to serve in his stead. That is why I am here.

I am reminded in this position of a story where a man asked a gentleman who had served on a number of juries, "Who influenced you most? Was it the lawyers or the witness or the judge?" To this inquiry the man replied, "I am a plain man and an honest man, and I ain't influenced by nothing that the lawyers say nor by what the witness says nor by what the judge says. I just looks at the man in the box and says to myself, 'If he ain't done nothing, why is he there?'" and I brings them all in guilty." So it seems to be my experience that any man who comes here and sits here is liable to be taken in this same unfortunate position that I am in, and I am the first victim to-day. But there will have to be others.

I remember of a tramp who called at a house for a good hand-out, and the good housewife said, "I am looking for a man. I want a man to do odd jobs around the house and run on errands and do my bidding and who never answers back." He says, "You are looking for a husband and not a man." So we in this reunion as we come back here see many familiar faces, but we are always on the lookout for new ones, and as the tramp said to the woman, we are always looking for something new, as he told her she was looking for a husband. We have with us to-day some who have not spoken to us before; I see one face and I am going to call upon him—Mr. Alfred Hartley, Fall River. I do not wish to have him avail himself of the time limit that has been set, arbitrarily, but I would like to have him say a few words to us if he will.

MR. ALFRED H. HARTLEY: I think you have called on the wrong man. I am no man to make speeches, but it is certainly gratifying to me to see so many here and to meet with you; and in these organizations and all organizations I would suggest that, as you have been talking here in the meeting about the historical part, that is a very essential part for you to work on. Everyone that wants to should work on that and get a history that will live when we are all dead and gone. And then another thing in all organizations is the social element which should be cultivated. We want to all try to cultivate that spirit of social life. That is the main thing in all organizations.

I thank you for calling on me, but as I have to take a train soon and there are other speechmakers probably, here is my cousin, Mr. Reynolds, who is a speechmaker, always ready to make a speech. I thank you.

TOASTMASTER: I shan't complain that the last speaker has exceeded the time limit set. I hope next time he will come prepared and not have to take a train.

Reference has been made to your last reunion and to the intellectual feast that was to be offered you to-day, and that reminded me also of a young lawyer's experience—all young lawyers have experiences. A woman came to him and went at great length into the details of her case, and after the lawyer had gone over it carefully, examined with care all the details of the case, he said, "I don't see how you can fail to win that case; looks like a good case." She said, "Well, that is just what I thought, yet my husband insisted that we ought to have a first-class lawyer." So perhaps Judge Reynolds thought to-day they would not need a first-class lawyer.

Rhode Island, although a small State, creates quite a little disturbance usually along the political line and it is not unusual to see two men pulling in different directions there; but they apparently have become reconciled and are calmly together to-day, and I am going to call on Mr. Edwin Reynolds of Providence. We know that he is well recommended and has come with a bit of his own delegation, so to speak, so we ought to receive something from him.

MR. EDWIN REYNOLDS. Mr. Toastmaster and Friends:—In following the distinguished gentleman from Fall River, I would simply say that we cannot say too much in favor of the beautiful way in which our officers have conducted the exercises this afternoon. I am very pleased to meet you all, and I shall be much pleased to meet you all again at the next annual meeting. I believe the object of our meetings is fully understood, fellowship and kindly good feeling, as our friend from Fall River has stated, and I thank you all for the opportunity to speak to you.

TOASTMASTER: It seems to me, as I remember, at the morning session the President reminded us of the objects of the Association as stated, I think, in the constitution—to wit, the collection and preservation of facts and events in the Reynolds family; and we certainly have good authority for that, for as I now recall it, it seems to me the prophet reminded us to "prepare thyself to seek thy fathers." That we have adopted it in our constitution, is good authority, it seems to me.

I would gladly call upon a great many here who I hoped would talk to us at some length. We have heard from our Chaplain, who is a very fortunate man, it seems to me, he lives in a very remarkable place. He is very fortunate to live in such a place near such a harbor. Whether we who live inland or by poorer harbors will see our ship come in as readily as his is another question; at any rate his ship ought to come in.

There is one more speaker. He doesn't come from Providence, but he is not barred by that fact. You will perhaps recall the story of an unpopular citizen who was lying in a very precarious state, in fact he was dying, and one of his neighbors came to him and said, "Are you quite ready to go?" He put up his hands and said, "Yes." "Well," he said, "I am glad you are, for that makes it unanimous." So to-day I think we all unanimously join in welcoming Dr. W. Myron Reynolds of New York, who I know is very anxious to get back at me if he has an opportunity.

DR. W. MYRON REYNOLDS. Mr. Toastmaster and Members of the Association.—I am before you to-day somewhat in the condition of the young minister who discovered after beginning the Sunday morning service that he had forgotten his notes, and told the congregation that he would have to depend on the Lord for what he would say, but in the evening he would come better prepared.

When called on for an after-dinner speech I am reminded of the school boy's composition on the subject of pins. He wrote, "pins have saved the lives of thousands, and tens of thousands, and hundreds of thousands, by people not swallowing them." I have often been called on for a speech and have reached the conclusion, if the school boy's theory of the pins is correct, I am liable at any time to receive the Carnegie medal for life saving, for the number of lives I have saved by not making speeches.

I am glad to meet so many of our older members, and join in the welcome extended the new members in our family association. We have met to-day under unusually favorable auspices. The New England States are perhaps the favored of all the States in the Union, and the State of Connecticut is to my mind the most favored of them all.

I have two things to boast of, of being born in the grand old State of Connecticut, and of being born into the Reynolds family.

Did you ever stop and think how much greater our heritage in being born into the Reynolds family than would have been our responsibility had we been born into the Smith family?

If it is a truism that men are only boys grown tall, what man at this banquet table has not often thought of the incomparable dishes served up in his youth by his New England mother, and, after marrying "the best girl in the world," possibly discovered it isn't always the flower of the family that makes the best bread; occasionally wondering why she did not acquire her New England mother's culinary art; or if perchance she had acquired it, regret with profound sorrow she could not have remained orthodox and steadfast in the culinary art of tickling the palate to gladden the heart?

The New England home and fireside, dear to the hearts of most of us as our birthplace, and the birthplace of our Nation, should be a perpetual inspiration to the members of the Reynolds family.

New London is hallowed ground to me, for here was born the sainted mother into whose angelic face I looked up from the cradle, whose bosom pillowed my childhood, whose lips were first to tell me the sacred story of the cross; whose gentle chiding words were a continual benediction; to whom I could always turn for ideals that were true, sincere and uplifting; whose sheltering arms encircled my boyhood and unceasingly kept before my eyes by example and precept things that were pure, noble and good; and whose refining influence, loving and tender care, would so gladly have extended into my manhood, had not her ever willing and never tiring hands ceased their doing, only when her dear heart stopped its beating. Her untimely death had taken out of my young life its purest flower, its greatest fruitage, the most beneficent teaching a devoted Christian mother could impart.

But we must not backward turn, if I would say aught that would interest those present, or influence any to again return to our family reunion.

We have heard from the honored representatives of the great legal profession, the bench and the bar; and the speaker early in the day has placed a chaplet upon the brow of our family name. We have seen that we are the citizens of no mean country; we are the representatives of no mean family; we are in this twentieth century creating no mean history. It is well that it is so, for we can pass this way but once. There is no return over the old pathway. No one who has wisely lived should desire to go back and begin again.

These annual gatherings are the milestones where each can gather and distribute. We can leave for those who shall follow something of help, of hope and encouragement, and still carry away more gain than loss, more pleasure than sorrow, more joy than misery, more friends than enemies; a rich accumulation which lightens the burden the heavier it grows and starts us on the morrow with purer spirit and a better purpose.

But for me to strive to add more fitting words to what has already been said would be an attempt to gild pure gold.

I am not aware who is responsible for bringing about the union of the several branches of the Reynolds family into the companionship of one family association, but I am sure it was a divinely inspired thought; for we are so constituted we must be bound together in domestic relationship and make friends and companions, as surely as we must eat and drink. The Bible being a revelation from God, He has taken the initiative, for we read in the Sacred Word, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," plainly showing a divine yearning for human fellowship. Why, then, should it be strange that our heavenly Father should seek to have fellowship with his children, and implant the same desire in our breast for companionship with each other?

The friendships we form and the companions we draw around us are largely of our own choosing, and have much to do with both our present as well as our future happiness. Our nature being social we form these friendships and are then swayed by them, for our companions exert a vast influence over us, unconscious though it be; and herein is our natural joy of life when these influences are for good. But mental power is not always proof against wrong influences here, though we shall know hereafter whom we have influenced for good or for ill.

Call not that man a friend or companion who, while he takes your hand and stands shoulder to shoulder by your side, is tempting you to destruction. From all such false friends, "Good Lord deliver us."

The Spanish proverb, "Live with the wolves and you will learn to howl," is as true to nature to-day as it has been proven in the ages that have passed.

And while we are striving for the advancement of our kindred association let us also aim to improve the condition of others around us, not losing sight of the fact that one of the first and most important accessories to promote happiness is to be found in the charitable judgment of those with whom we are brought in daily contact. The habit of finding a good motive, whenever it is possible to do so, is one of the noblest peculiarities of a true manly or womanly character. To be kind and helpful rather than harsh and uncharitable in our criticism of others is an imperative duty; for to cultivate suspicion is to force the heart and the affections to take slow poison. We can find no happiness in it and we loosen the golden bands of friendship; for the everlasting law is, what we give to others around us we get for ourselves in return.

Let us then remember our attitude toward others is the sure indication of their attitude toward us, and the way we conduct ourselves toward the world is the product of our conviction as to our duty to be kind and helpful or our determination to selfishly get all we can, at whatever cost to others.

But what a world this would be if we were all governed by conscience; if every man had a high moral ideal, and every day made an upward step toward it. The conscience being the guardian of the man, on it he must depend for his inspiration, the character of his life, his present as well as his future happiness.

The ideal man is not the man who has never had temptations, but he who has overcome them in his daily walks; for what is accomplished with an effort is better than what is attained without it. To give a man all that he desires without demanding that he shall work for it is to bring about his ruin. Every temptation confronting him in his daily vocation is a test of his manhood, and if he courageously resisted it contributes to the strength of that manhood.

A man who has nothing to resist has nothing to achieve, and when he sees that the right alone can furnish him that which he most needs, then the wrong will cease to be a temptation, so that perfect obedience to nature's laws must inevitably produce ideal manhood.

There is nothing under the blue canopy of heaven worth half so much as a consciousness that we are in the right and have done what is right. What we have done for ourselves alone dies with us, but what we have done for others in the world remains and is immortal.

Honor is worth far more than it costs to maintain it. Nothing counts for so much either now or in the hereafter as a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

There are other treasures more to be desired than wealth and fame. A sweet temper and a contented soul are treasures worth striving for. With God above us and heaven ahead of us we ought to bear with patience, and by being cheerful ourselves give good cheer to others around us to whom our example may be an inspiration.

But, Mr. Toastmaster, I have already said more than I had intended. Commencing my remarks about a young minister is no excuse for preaching a little sermon.

In conclusion let me say, the members of the Reynolds family have much in common and nothing in conflict. Their representatives have been found in every walk of life. As a rule they are even tempered, of a cheerful, determined disposition, thoroughly domestic, and easily managed when they can have their own way, apt to look on the bright side of life. For we believe the world is growing broader in its ideas, more generous in its charities, more noble in its inspirations, sweeter in its temper with every coming age; and when the history of the present generation has been written, may the members of the Reynolds Family Association be numbered among the foremost in bringing about this advancement.

TOASTMASTER: It seems to me after the speech that we have had, if our Association needed a motto for our coat-of-arms we could entrust that task to no one better than to the gentleman whom you have just heard.

I had a copy of a college paper that I would have read to you to-day had I had more time. It concerns the Hon. James Reynolds of New York, whom we had the pleasure of having with us some six or seven years ago, and who at that time, as I now recall it, gave us a very good speech, and we hoped to have him with us again, but I don't think he has been with us since that time. I will just refer to it briefly.

At that time Mr. Reynolds was secretary to Mayor Low, who you will remember was having a very extraordinary administration in New York city. Mr. Reynolds, I think it was in 1905, was sent to China by President Roosevelt to examine into certain peculiarities there, and he was received very cordially by the emperor. The emperor some time previous to that had come to New York for a visit and Mayor Low was not in the city. Mr. Reynolds did the honors, so to speak, for the mayor in his absence, and ingratiated himself at that time in the good wishes of the emperor; and so it was that on this visit Mr. Reynolds was shown every honor, extraordinary honors to a stranger, to an American. It was just after the Boxer outbreak in China, and he was shown every honor and the emperor loaded him with gifts when he returned and sent messages by him to President Roosevelt and to the emperor's son who was studying in this country. So you will see that the name of Reynolds has gone to China and it must be familiar with the consuls who are ruling that country. It would doubtless be interesting to you should I read it, but that is a brief synopsis of what the article was.

Mr. Reynolds I think holds some position in the national capital at this time, and I was hoping that he would be present to-day.

Now I know we are all anxious to get away and get out this beautiful day, especially on this sort of holiday here. I am glad that we have heard from so many and we would like to hear from more.

At this time I am reminded again of the young politician—young lawyers are sometimes young politicians, so I am reminded of all these things—whose friend asked him how his first speech was received. "Well," he said, "a friend of mine who was there told me when I sat down it was the very best thing I had ever done." So I think now I will sit down and I am sure you will say it is about the very best thing I have done.

Immediately after adjournment the members and friends of the Association went to Ocean Beach where the remainder of the day was spent very pleasantly.

Appendix

A Brief Record of the Descendants of JOHN REYNOLDS, of Watertown, Mass., (later of Wethersfield and Stamford, Conn.)

JOHAN REYNOLDS, undoubtedly a brother of Robert, was born in England in 1612. It is believed by many that he was also a brother of James of Narragansett and William of Providence. It is not known just when John reached America, but he first appeared in Watertown about 1634, in which year his wife, Sarah, and others later associated with him at Watertown, Wethersfield and Stamford, sailed from Ipswich on the ship Elizabeth. He was admitted as a freeman of Watertown, May 6, 1635. Several months later he removed with other settlers to Wethersfield, Conn., and in 1641 to Stamford, where his wife died August 21, 1657.
