The Autobiography of John Reynolds Read on his 88th birthday, 18 June 1870 Compiled by R. Inskeep - Part II

This event determined my father to immigrate to the United States. Accordingly, he closed up his business. The arrangement was for my father to come over to the United States, establish himself in business, and return for the family. But when the time for parting came, my mother would go with him. They sailed in the ship Active and landed at New York in October, after a voyage of six weeks.

The following spring, March 3, 1795, I and Mary left Leominster for Liverpool, where Anne from Holywell joined us by arrangement with Mrs. Maddock, my cousin, who, with a sister-in-law, several servants, and some friends, with their children, were coming over. My cousin kindly took charge of us. We went on board ship at Liverpool March 22d and after a very stormy voyage landed at New York June 12, 1795, and thence sailed up the river to Lansingburg, N. Y., at which place my father had begun business in the spring, having opened a family grocery store. Hard biscuit, salt beef and pork, with beans and potatoes, were the common skip fare.

Thus, after a year of separation of parents and children, we were, by the mercy of God, all brought together under the parental roof. We resided at Lansingburg until the spring of 1797.

In 1796 my father purchased a lot and built a two-story frame house, into which we removed in the fall while it was yet in an unfinished state. By that transaction my father was put in debt and unable to finish the house and recruit his store of groceries.

On the 12th day of June we landed at New York, between which and Birmingham or Liverpool, I made a comparison very unfavorable to New York. It is my remembrance that the majority of the houses were frame, of two stories. Brooklyn was a small village. Small boats, with two oarsmen, constituted the ferry between the city and the village.
